The Boastful Donkey

Laura E Richards

Once upon a time there was a donkey who lived in a field where there was no pond. So he had never seen his own image, and he thought he was the biggest and strongest and handsomest creature in the world.

One day a lion came through the field, and, being a polite beast, stopped to greet the donkey. 'Good morning, friend!' he said. 'What a fine day this is!'

'Fine enough, I dare say!' said the donkey. 'I never think about the weather. I have other things to think about.'

'Indeed!' said the lion. 'May I ask what things?'

'None of your business!' said the donkey rudely; and he set up a loud braying, thinking to frighten the lion away.

'Why do you bray?' asked the lion.

'Bray!' cried the donkey. 'That was not braying—it was roaring!'

'If you think I don't know braying from roaring,' said the lion, still politely, 'you are mistaken. That was a bray.'

Hidden Cities

History

Did you know?

Cappadocia in Turkey has a very complex network of underground cities. Some of these underground cities are around 2900 years old.

More about it

Cappadocia is a historical region in the country of Turkey. The region is famous for its beautiful landscape which consists of volcanic mountains, soft tufa rock, and many unique rock structures known as "fairy chimneys" by the locals.

Below this landscape is however a complex network of underground cities that span kilometres in each direction. These cities are thousands of years old and massive in size. They showcase ancient architecture and engineering. These underground cities had functional ventilation, unique establishments and even defence mechanisms.

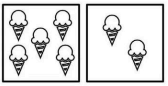

It is believed that these underground cities were initially built as caves during the eighth and seventh centuries BCE by the Phrygians (an ancient Indo-European-speaking people). They carved their living spaces into the region's soft volcanic rock. They wanted to protect themselves from foreign invasion and allow thousands of people to live their lives in total secrecy.

ENGLISH LITERATURE RIDDLES

I write of hills, rain, and childhood delight,
Of small quiet towns and stars in the night.
From Dehradun's charm to Mussoorie's breeze,
Who am I, who tells stories of Himalayan foothills.

_____

In a town called Malgudi, my stories unfold,
Of ordinary people in a small town with hearts of gold.
I write of life—simple, warm, and bright,
Who am I, whose tales Indians adore?
